Summary:

- Crowdfunding is as much about marketing as it is about charity, and those who can't package their struggles in a compelling way — because they lack the social capital, the social network, or whatever magic ingredient causes some campaigns to go viral — often fade into obscurity.
- As many happy stories as there are in charitable crowdfunding, there are to many really worthy causes that nobody has given to.
- There are many ways in which crowdfunding is a poor substitute for social services, but the main issue is this: Crowdfunding doesn't help everyone. In fact, it doesn't help enough people.
